Chapter 2

Introduction

This is an introduction to the Mini Bookdown Template!

2.1 Questionable Decisions

Did you know that trying to manage tutorials and assignments in a Git/GitHub class is very challenging if you've never done anything coding related before? Apparently yes! Who could have predicted that.

2.2 Potential

Seems like it might still be useful for documentation if we're trying to get away from Google Docs.

Chapter 3

Chapter One: Away from Google Docs

The problem with Google Docs is that some people just can't be trusted with a rich text editor.

3.1 Consistency

In documentation, one should really use a single font.

3.2 Tables

Almost as poor form as iFrames are to modern HTML.

3.3 Formatting

When different people prefer to emphasize with bold, italics, or ++underlining++, it gets messy.

Chapter 4

Epilogue

In conclusion, using a text editor is preferred to keep folks from getting too fancy.
